Session 1: Current Expeditionary Issues and Service Perspectives

Portsmouth Ballroom IV-VIII

Session Chair: Mr. Dewey Mauldin, Vice President, Marine Corps Systems, The Boeing Company

Expeditionary Warfare and Operations are a key component of U.S strategy today. In Afghanistan, the services have conducted various expeditionary operations and have learned and identified requirements that need improving or further development. This Panel will discuss those operations, additional recent exercises, and new, emerging or modified requirements needed to support expeditionary warfare. In addition, current leaders will be invited to discuss their current operations, exercises and issues in expeditionary warfare as well as the future of expeditionary warfare through the lens of their particular service or organization.

Session 3: New Concepts, Programs and Political Reality

Portsmouth Ballroom IV-VIII

Session Chair: Dr. Sam J. Tangredi, Director for San Diego Operations, Strategic Insight, Ltd.

Expeditionary warfare does not exist in a strategic vacuum. Expeditionary warfare forces and systems are part of a portfolio of capabilities maintained by the U.S. Department of Defense, many of which compete against each other for resources. The perception of the senior Defense leadership and the Congress concerning the relative value of expeditionary warfare has a direct effect on requirements, programs and resources. Defense reviews, such as the QDR, play a critical role in determining DoD priorities. The prioritization of alternative or related concepts such as Air/Sea Battle, can impact the future of expeditionary warfare. This Session is designed to discuss the interplay between concepts, perceptions, programs and resources.
